

THE BEST CHARITABLE BEAUTY BUYS

The products and brands that give back

By Becki Murray 5 October 2017

While treating yourself to a new make-up or skincare product is always a thrill, it's even nicer when you know that the brands you love are giving back to charity too.

We've rounded up our favourite beauty lines that help support causes, from cancer research to endangered wildlife preservation, everytime you buy their products.

Chantecaille

In a campaign to raise awareness about the devastating effects of deforestation and the threat it has to the existence to a wealth of species, including gorillas in the Congo, Chantecaille have released their Save The Forest Eye Shade Palette. A portion of the proceeds from each purchase goes to the Rainforest Alliance to help protect forests and the wildlife that call them home.

This Works

Throughout Autumn, This Works will be partnering with Shelter to raise money for the millions of people affected by bad housing and homelessness. That means every time you buy something from the brand to help you relax and unwind in comfort, you'll be helping others to do the same.

Kohl Kreatives

If their Instagram-worthy appearance and impressive make-up application wasn't enough, all of the profits from these brushes go to Kohl Kares, a charity providing free workshops for transitioning transgender individuals and recovering cancer patients.

Neal's Yard Remedies

Through sales of its Bee Lovely collection, Neal's Yard Remedies donates money to help save Britain's bees. With experts warning that honey bees could disappear entirely from the UK in just a few years, these insects need protecting if we want to continue to have access to organic honey's skincare benefits.

Sana Jardin

Sana Jardin works to empower and give back to the women in Morocco who harvest the flowers used in their fragrances, by providing them with the skills to create their own line of candles and orange blossom water. The women then keep 100% of this revenue.
